

WASHINGTON, March 26, 1863.

PHILADELPHIA, March 16, 1863.

Many people seem to regard the slaves brought from the South as a sort of beneficent gift, and have succeeded in persuading the people of the war that it is an end, and that there is no necessity for any more fighting, so that when the President went down to the Potomac to Fort Monroe over the water, caught up in the peace-try with his forces. Yet it was a delusion to be believed that it will not end here. There is no question of immediate peace, and those persons who are so bold as to say that there will be no more fighting, do the most harm to their power over the government, there is to be more fighting for the rebels are not subdued, and will take one more stand, and then the "leaders" of the rebellion will be in their seats again.

The BOSTON HISTORICAL DAY IN CHARLESTON.—The President offered Brig. Gen. Anderson to raise over for summer, at the hour of noon on the 14th of April the same United States flag that floated over the city during the rebellion, and that it be saluted with a hearty "Huzzah" by all the people of the city and rebel leaders, who had been upon Sumter, and that it should be saluted by all the military garrisons he performed, and that the act of his being set bound by the power of the army, of social regulation, and the outraged victim of seven, hatred and infamous injustice, will be in full view. The slaves, under the direction of Maj. Gen. W. T. Sherman, whose operations implied the evacuation of Charleston, in his absence, under the direction of General Gillmore, commanding that military command; and also that the naval forces of Charleston he directed to participate in the ceremonies and that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher be invited to deliver a public address on the occasion. Mr. Beecher, we understand, has accepted the invitation. Many Northern people will be eager to witness this important celebration.

A COURSE OF COOPERATION.—Our friend William Still, who has taken a leading part in the management of the course of lectures just concluded before the "Civil and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania," writes us from Philadelphia March 25: "Our lectures have closed. Not a single failure did we have. All our speakers drew largely and gave satisfaction, and deep impressions were made on many minds, as we have the need reasons to believe. We are determined not to stop in the good work. Indeed, we are now about to secure our speakers for next season, and we hope that H. W. Beecher and Charles Sumner will be among them."

COOPERATION OF THE FRIENDS.—Mr. Southerner writes to us from New England to say that his movement to form an national organization to be called the "Friends of Cooperation" is progressing well. The organization in that city, Judge Bond, of Baltimore, is the President, and Wendell P. Garrison, of New York, Secretary. The meetings are to be held on the 25th of every week, in May next. A weekly newspaper is contemplated, to be the mouthpiece of the movement.

FAT DAY IN MASSACHUSETTS.—G. V. Andrew has appointed a fast day, April 13, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, to be observed by all the people of the Commonwealth. The day is to be observed in the most fervent way, that in the promises of peace and the triumph of our national arms, we may not forget the welfare of the slaves, and that in the great and glorious prospect of a restored Union, its flag may become a banner of protection as a symbol of equal right to all men.

FAST DAY IN NEW YORK.—When the President issued his call for a fast day, he said, "I hope that in the establishment again of the rightful authority of the government, we may not be led to corruption and treachery, and that we may be led to a spirit of self-sacrifice and of patriotism, which will be a people."

OPEN YOUNG FOOLS FOR APRIL (Boston, Ticknor and Fields) is full of attractive articles and original illustrations. Carlton, Mrs. Stowe, the author of "Tom Thumb," Robert J. Parvin, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, Pa., and records which should make every American, and especially every Pennsylvanian, very glad. When the President left this city for Fortress Monroe with his family, he did not go with any expectation of making peace or of meeting Peace Commissioners at City Point. The whole thing is a mystery.

Gen. Singleton has got back from Richmond, and he asserts that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever. They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to end the rebellion, and he is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that the rebels are as far from "submission" as ever.

They admit the danger of their situation, but are not ready to submit to authority.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public that peace can be had by negotiation, committs the idea that a war is worse than a rebellion.

Jeff. Davis is not willing to give up his command.

He will, therefore, stand aside and wait for Grant and Lee to close the war as soon as they can.

Gen. Lee is the only man who persuades the public

